It will be first of its kind of initiative in Pakistan where Sindh province will enable such a marginalized group to provide education facility.

Discussion Points.

- In order to set the ground Minister Education and Literacy shared that every responsible democracy as well as social welfare state take care of all children and consider it as responsibility of state to provide education opportunities. These serves will bring societal reforms by reducing the number of prisoners and allow the children of convicted people to become socio-economically viable citizens.
- Minister Sb. also shared the example of Cambridge University, UK which provided educational opportunities to more than 200,000 such type of marginalized children.
- He shared his intention to pilot this project in Sindh which can be example for other provinces.
- It was unanimously agreed that it is important to collect the data (from convicted people as primary sources) and validate the data (through secondary sources such as Pegham E Pakistan data) and develop the profiling of the children with age brackets and gender segregation.
- There should also be data related to household economic assessment of the convicted families so we should understand that what level of support is required to those families.
- Once the data is collected then those children should be provided with the educational facilities as per their age, demographics, and existing situation. Numerous educational avenues were proposed.
  - Formal schooling through existing public schools or private schools. In the public schools SE&LD can facilitate through girls stipend and free textbooks. Whereas the Directorate of Inspection & Registration of Private Institute shared that these children can be facilitated fees waiver through 10% free education law.
  - Accelerated Learning Program through Non-Formal Education to the slightly overage children by opening NFE centers.
  - Provision of Technical and Vocational Education Training and skills through STEVTA and BBSHRDB. The MD STEVTA & Secretary BBSHRDB mentioned the possibility of enrolling children into existing 258 STEVTA centers or BBSYDP Programs (where individuals of 18-35 years) might be eligible for stipend.

- Sindh Education Foundation – SEF shared their experience of establishing an educational facility for juvenile in Sukkur Prison using ALP approach. They were asked to provide further details in the next meeting.
- Tailormade technical courses can be designed for adolescents and adults so they can become economically viable citizen. MD STEVTA suggested that in addition to Tech and skill courses, we should explore avenues to create market linkages for such individuals and create a skill development fund for those individuals who want to become entrepreneurs after obtaining skills and education.
- If learners are eligible for university education, then they can obtain the scholarship from Sindh Education Endowment Fund – SEEF. There is already a quota for different disadvantaged students so if committee decides then we can allocate the quota for students of this segment as well.
- These children may also be linked with Waseela e Taleem and other safety net programs.
- To review the models, if any with SOS Village Private Schools and Edhi Schools which also prefer to support such children.

Recommendations/Action Points:

As per suggestion of all stakeholders and directives of honorable Ministers, following actions were proposed:

- Department for Education of Persons with Disability – DEPD, Sindh Child Protection Authority, Chairman Sindh Human Rights Commission, SOS Village and EDHI Foundation should be included in this consultative group for next meetings.

Sindh govt pledges support for education of inmates' children

Dawn Report

KARACHI: The Sindh government has decided to formulate a plan to assist the children of convicted prisoners in completing their education.

In a joint meeting chaired by Sindh Education Minister Syed Sardar Ali Shah and Minister for Prisons Ali Hassan Zardari, discussions were held on various proposals to support the education of prisoners' children.

During the meeting, suggestions were presented by "Paigham Pakistan" regarding the education of prisoners' children. Minister Shah welcomed these suggestions, emphasising that the mistakes of one individual should not result in punishment for their family, especially their children.

He added that the state has a dual responsibility: enforcing the law and ensuring children receive an education.

Minister Shah further announced that a global-first model would be developed to provide formal education, non-formal education and technical training to the children of convicted prisoners, from school to university.

He expressed hope that this model would serve as a guide for the future of prisoners' children across other provinces of Pakistan.

"We want to turn the children of convicted prisoners into educated and patriotic Pakistanis. Instead of creating future prisoners, we aim to produce responsible citizens," he said.

Minister Zardari pledged full support for the initiative and stated that efforts would also focus on educating those children who could not continue their studies due to family issues.

He highlighted that the Sindh government, under the leadership of the Pakistan Peoples Party, is working to transform the concept of prisons into "rehabilitation homes."

To gather data on prisoners' children currently pursuing education, a six-member working committee, headed by the Secretary of College Education, was formed. This committee will work with prisoners to collect information regarding their children's education.

The meeting also decided that children whose family heads or breadwinners are incarcerated will receive assistance in continuing their studies, especially if they are enrolled in private schools. They will benefit from a 10 per cent free scholarship.

Sindh to initiate education support for convicted prisoner's children

OBSERVER REPORT

Education Minister, Syed Sardar Ali Shah, alongside Minister for Prisons, Ali Hassan Zardari, the provincial government has decided to provide crucial educational support to the children of incarcerated individuals. The meeting included key figures such as Zahid Ali Abbasi, Secretary of School Education, Abbas Baloch, Secretary of Universities and Boards, and various representatives from the non-formal education sector and social organization, Pegham Pakistan, including Professor Miraj Siddiqui.

The assembly centered on strategies to facilitate educational opportunities for these vulnerable children. Representatives from Pegham Pakistan presented valuable insights aimed at enhancing accessibility to education for the offspring of convicted individuals. Sardar Ali Shah emphasized an essential principle: "No family, especially the children, should bear the brunt of a single person's mistake."

He articulated that the state not only has a duty to enforce the law but also to ensure educational access for these children. This pioneering model will offer a comprehensive education pathway from school to university, as well as non-formal and technical education. Shah noted, "This will be the world's first model of its kind," and added that it would set a precedent for prisons in other provinces of Pakistan. "Our goal is to sculpt these children into educated, patriotic Pakistanis," the Education Minister affirmed. He highlighted the imperative of transforming the narrative surrounding prisoner's children, stating,

"We do not want the child of a convict to become a future convict, but instead a responsible citizen." Ali Hassan Zardari, the Minister for Prisons, reiterated the commitment: "Every possible support will be provided to ensure the completion of education for these children." He acknowledged the need to reach out to those children who were unable to finish their education due to familial troubles. To further this initiative, a committee has been established to gather information on children currently studying in prisons. This committee will work closely with parents to collect pertinent educational details concerning their children.

Pegham-e-Pakistan:

Launching Ceremony – A Historic Milestone in Human Reform

Alhamdulillah, the Research and Development Team of Pegham-e-Pakistan, led by Muhammad Meraj Siddiqui, an education psychologist and renowned motivational rehabilitation trainer, successfully launched the world's first-of-its-kind reform program inside Central Jail Karachi. This groundbreaking ceremony received extensive coverage across national media and set a new benchmark in global human rights and rehabilitation practices.

During the launch, Professor Meraj Siddiqui presented a detailed briefing of the program, explaining that Pegham-e-Pakistan is the only model capable of breaking the intergenerational cycle of crime. He highlighted that if nations across the world ever seek to eliminate radicalization, extremism, and inherited criminal behavior, they will ultimately have to adopt this holistic approach. The program aims to eradicate extremist tendencies among prisoners and transform their mindset through empathy, education, and responsible reintegration.

A revolutionary component of the initiative is the commitment of the state to provide education, care, and personal development for the children of convicted prisoners. When the state embraces the children of offenders as its own—offering schooling, emotional support, and a future filled with opportunities—a natural sense of love and loyalty develops in the hearts of these families towards the nation. This compassionate act demonstrates that while the criminal is punished, the innocent child will never be deprived of their rights. Such an approach has never been implemented anywhere in the world and stands as a monumental example of human rights and social justice.

The ceremony was graced by distinguished personalities and key stakeholders, including:

Sardar Ali Shah: Sindh Education Minister

Ali Hassan Zardari: Minister for Prisons (Jail Khana Jat)

Muhammad Iqbal Memon: Sindh Home Secretary

Zahid Ali Abbasi: Secretary School Education

Qazi Nazir Ahmed: IG Prisons

Ms. Rafia Mallaha: Additional Director General, Directorate of Private Schools

Professor Muhammad Meraj Siddiqui: Representative of Paigham-e-Pakistan

Representatives from various departments, civil society, and law enforcement agencies.

On the very first day of the launch, over 27 prisoners submitted the data of their children, and their school admissions were initiated immediately. With more than 27,000 inmates across Sindh's prison system, the state is now poised to take full responsibility for the education and upbringing of these children under the umbrella of Pegham-e-Pakistan.

This historic initiative reflects Pakistan's commitment to peacebuilding, de-radicalization, and social rehabilitation. It is a message to the world that true national strength is built not only through law enforcement, but through compassion, education, and transformative justice.

Pegham-e-Pakistan is not just a program—it is a promise.

A promise to break the chain of crime.
